Introduction

Report

As requested, this is my report on describing various extracurricular activities which a typical weekday of USA students comprises. The information has been being collected for two years, therefore the comparison between them is also included in this report as well as certain verdicts are made in terms of general tendency.

2014 results

The first chart illustrates that the vast majority of students prefer ^{during their weekdays} sleeping ~~in order~~ in order to restore energy and get ready for an upcoming school day both physically and mentally. Then, leisure and sports hold the second position approximately consuming 3,8 hours. Nevertheless, increasing an intellectual level through educational activities is unexpectedly popular with youngsters. Among other things, there is a ^{wide} range of other options connected with time spending which are less spread, such as traveling or simply doing nothing.

2015 facts

Here it can be easily observed from the diagram that the most widespread activity remains the same. However, several priorities have changed. For instance, doing sports and leisure start ~~to~~ flurrying young people's minds and are becoming their main interests. Furthermore, educational activities have lost their positions among students. (the essence of education for them has dropped down)

Conclusion

Taking everything into account, I ^{let me} can claim that students in 2015 have become more active by doing different sports, traveling to other places etc. The pursuit ~~of~~ of life has wholly increased. ^{r among young people}
