The aim of this report is to present a project on the USA full-time university and college students' activities during weekdays.

The report is illustrated by two charts assessing information from surveys conducted in 2014 and 2015.

As seen from the charts the rythm of the students' life became faster in a year. All major extracurricular activities became more popular among them. Leisure and sports time increased mostly and is on the second place after sleeping, however, it ~~was~~ also was last year. Still, the difference in time is 2,8 hours. In 2014 the third place was given to education time, but ¹⁰⁰ this year young people work more than study. Traveling catches on too and also takes more time than studying. Besides, students eat slower, maybe, because they eat out more frequently.

What reduces is not only study time but also time spent on sleeping, grooming and ~~other~~ other things, e.g. ~~the~~ surfing the Internet and playing computer games. The latter can be regarded as a positive trend as now virtual activity is being substituted by real life.

To conclude, in a short period of time the life style and the priorities of full-time students changed sufficiently. The changes are mainly positive as young people spend more time on ~~extra~~ entertaining and useful activities that help them to discover the real world they live in.

~~the reason~~ Most probably, one of the main reasons pursuing this is the policy of the American government that makes traveling, leisure and sports facilities were cheap, and, therefore, ~~available for~~ ~~students.~~ affordable for students.
