I have collected some materials during my research on average daily activities of US' students. Now I would like to share the most remarkable and interesting facts. sp.

In terms of my project I had been observing everyday life of full-time students for two past years. Eight most common activities were chosen as the criteria - from natural needs and education to hobbies. As we can see from charts depicting both years, sleeping possesses the first priority among young Americans. The percent of extracurricular activities and sports ~~hobbies~~ takes the second place. The time spent on education and work is of the third importance. Finally, grooming is the least time-consuming activity in both years. gr.

However, there were also some remarkable changes in the ways of spending usual day. Firstly, the time for "other" things in 2015 has significantly declined in comparison with the previous year. Secondly, the role of hours given to extracurricular activities has risen, which means that the students must have become more interested in such things as sports and art. And, finally, I cannot help noticing the reduction of time devoted to education while working is seem to be given higher priority. To my mind, this fact points on the students' wish to earn more money and travel, as this activity seems to be taking popularity. gr.

In conclusion, I would underline the following

Trends: the stability of natural and leisure needs, the catching the popularity of travelling and the fact of trying to substitute education with working. 248.
